

WELCOME, KAREN LILJEQUIST!
SEE YOU AROUND, MARY JO!

MARY JO DORSEY

Karen Liljequist

Many libraries—medical and otherwise—have subscriptions to USA TODAY. Certainly, with its innovative use of color and graphics, the paper's success shows that many have grown to find it to be an informative and entertaining read. Founded by self-made millionaire Al Neuharth in 1982, the mid-market publication was not initially profitable. In one sense, however, USA TODAY's "recent loss" is our gain!

KAREN LILJEQUIST, who replaced Nancy Sakino Spears as the librarian at The Children's Institute in Squirrel Hill in December, worked in a variety of roles at this national newspaper for 18 years before deciding to obtain her M.L.I.S. at the University of Pittsburgh's School of Information Sciences. With an undergraduate degree in political science and a minor in Russian, Karen most recently managed the advertising systems department at USA TODAY's corporate headquarters in Northern Virginia.

In addition to providing her expertise at The Institute, Karen also was recently hired to work part-time at The Western Pennsylvania Hospital's Health Sciences Library. She is sharing the position of librarian with MARY JO DORSEY, who has cut back her hours to pursue her Ph.D. in library and information sciences, which she is hoping to complete in the spring of 2007.

Excerpted with permission from the Pittsburgh Chapter of the Medical Library Association newsletter, The Pittsburgh Pulse.

Please stop by the library and welcome Karen. Mary Jo's and Karen's hours are as follows:
